OHIO UNIVERSITY'S 65th football season is history. And what history! Ten games played and ten games won!

The resulting 10-0 record was the best ever recorded by an Ohio University football team. Certainly there have been other undefeated seasons—four besides this one.

But the 1960 team was the only one to win 10 in one season. Others had a chance to do this, but none ever did.

The other undefeated records were in 1918 (4-0-1), 1929 (9-0-0), 1930 (8-0-1), and 1935 (8-0-0).

Ten games in 1950 resulted in a 6-4 mark followed by 1951's 5-4-1. These were the only other 10-game seasons.

So, undeniably, it was the greatest season record-wise in the history of Ohio U. football. And it brought the national "small college" championship.

What brought about this fine record?

Coach Bill Hess attributes it to "a dedicated coaching staff and a dedicated football team with lots of poise."

These, of course, were the end product of the efforts of many individuals.

Certainly the Bobcat booster organization, the Green and White Club, played a strong part in helping with many little things that keep morale high—such as pre-season outings on the Ohio River, a get-acquainted night at the Athens Country Club, providing jobs where needed, and hosting school athletes when they visit.

They also provided trophies awarded to the outstanding player each week and a trophy to the season's most valuable player.

Hess says he has never been with a harder working or more dedicated group of coaches than he has as his assistants. These are Frank Richey, backfield and overall defense; Cliff Heffelfinger, defensive line and tackles; Hugh Hindman, offensive line and guards and centers and in charge of the overall offense, and Bob Kappes, offensive and defensive ends and chief scout.

KEY PASS in Bowling Green championship game is snared by Hallback Bob Harrison. Pass was thrown by Quarterback Bucky Wagner (No. 18). Harrison and Wagner were voted "Bobcats of the Week" for their performances at BGSU.

Reading over those assignments brings many questions as to what does Hess do? He is often heard to say that "I have trouble finding a chance to coach out on the practice field. I even wonder what worth I am on the sidelines during a game. Hugh runs the offense from the press box and Richey runs the defense from the sidelines."

But Hess is the organizing genius behind this dedicated group of individuals.

Each man knows his particular duties both on and off the field. Hess is a firm believer in writing out or charting duties, plays, performances both on the field of play and in the office. This allegiance to detail is one of the major factors in the team's success.

Of course, top-notch personnel have to be available both on the playing field and in the office to carry out the program to a successful conclusion. The coaching staff takes pride in the fine young men comprising the team. The sterling qualities of the staff rubbed off onto this team.

Hess or one of his assistants often say that they have never seen a team with as much chance to have senioritis as this one demonstrate the poise and dedication to a common goal of the 1960 Bobcats.

Fifteen seniors were on the squad, eight of them starting.

During a 10-game schedule, including three "major college" squads, situations often arise where individuals with less poise or esprit de corps will fail to achieve their goal. But not the 1960 Bobcats. They displayed these assets to the utmost.

There were many times during the season when pressure could have taken its toll of a less-poised team.

Probably the first time was the third game of the season, at Kent State. The Flashes wanted to atone for last year's

MOST VALUABLE PLAYER of the year, co-captain and guard Jae Dean, shares elation with his wife, Lillian, at football banquet. Teammates made the selection, and trophy was presented by the Green & White Club.

46-0 thumping at the hands of the Bobcats at Athens.

Taking the opening kickoff, the Bobcats marched 48 yards in six plays with Harrison scoring from 20 yards out. After only three minutes of play the score was 7-0. The second drive took longer, but in 18 plays the Bobcats had marched 73 yards to score from four yards out on a run by Brooks. With five minutes elapsed in the second quarter, OU led, 14-0.

OU held Kent on downs and took over the ball on their own 49 yard line. John Dickason, senior halfback gained six yards to the Kent 45. Then Bob Harrison, senior halfback, scooted over left tackle 45 yards for a touchdown on the Bobcats' second play from scrimmage. Senior End George Belu's placement was good.

On the Bobcats' second chance at the ball they scored again, going 80 yards in 12 plays to make the score read 14-0 at the end of the first quarter. This took some of the wind from Kent's sails.

Belu's 30-yard field goal midway through the second quarter gave the Bobcats a 17-0 halftime bulge. They went on to win, 25-8. Pressure-pot number one cooled off.

Next came the trip to Boston University, a "major" Eastern power. The Bobcats were favored in some circles, but staid Boston newsmen were skeptical of this "small college" upstart from the Midwest, likening itself to Ohio State.

Using mostly third stringers the second half, OU won 36-6. Pressure-pot number two was cooled off.

Another major opponent was coming up, Xavier, at Cincinnati. Here again the Bobcats were pressured into showing that they were better than their "small college" tag. Another factor added pressure to this game—weather.

Soon after the game started, a thunderstorm hit and lasted most of the rest of the game. The Bobcats were able to score midway through the second quarter on Senior Fullback Bob Brooks' 14-yard blast up the middle. After that, however, offenses of both teams were bogged down in the heavy footing and OU was fortunate to gain a 6-0 win.

TRI-CAPTAINS for 1961, selected by the team, are (l to r) Allen Miller, guard from Canal Winchester; Ted Stute, tackle from Enon; and Otis Wagner, line backer who also will be running at fullback next year, Greenfield. All will be seniors.

Then, the pressure-pot was brewed to the boiling point. Next opponent—Miami.

An Ohio University football team had not beaten Miami since 1942. The 1953 team tied them for the closest to a win in that span.

The largest crowd in Ohio University history was in attendance—15,308. It was also the dedication game of the stadium as Don C. Peden Stadium. None of this seemed to bother the Bobcats—least of all the opposing Miamians.

They went on to win, 21-0. A steaming pressure-pot number three was softened to nothing.

Hess' first major goal of the season was accomplished—beating Miami.

A minor pressure-pot surrounded preparations for Western Michigan. They had lost to Bowling Green and Miami each by one point. The Bobcats made short work of this steaming cauldron. A 17-yard field goal by Belu opened the scoring, 3-0. Midway through the second quarter, Brooks plunged from the one and it was 10-0 at the half.

OU scored twice in the third quarter, for the final tally of 24-0. Western was never able to penetrate closer than OU's 17-yard line the entire game.

The Championship Game

After the 19-0 win over Marshall, the climax of the season arrived—Bowling Green.

Sports Illustrated threw extra ingredients into the steaming cauldron by sending a reporter to Athens for a day and a half and then to Bowling Green to cover the game. The resulting story was in the following week's issue of the magazine.

It told of how OU once again arose to the occasion to prove it was the best "small college" team in the land. An overflow crowd of 11,660 were in attendance to see the top two teams in the nation vie for the number one spot. Bowling Green was also protecting an 18-game winning streak.

The Falcons scored first to increase the pressure on the favored Bobcats as it had been the first time they were behind all season.

Shortly after, OU tied the score and at half-time it was 7-7.

OU scored early in the fourth quarter and were driving for another marker while holding the Falcons at bay to win, 14-7, almost certainly clinching the national title and winning their first Mid-American Conference Championship since 1953. Goal number two was accomplished—win the league title.

One more game remained—the Dads' Day encounter against Southern Illinois. Their only defeat had been to Bowling Green, 27-6. OU subdued them easier than expected, 48-6, to finish off as national champions and markup the school's best season ever. Goal number three accomplished—finish undefeated and win the national title.

All in a Season's Work

ADVOCATES of a shorter work week will not gain any support from Ohio University's varsity football coaching staff of 1960.

One of the major factors for the success of the Bobcats' fine 10-0 season—the best record compiled by an Ohio U. team in the school's 65 years of football—was the expert planning and complete dedication to their job and certain goals of this five-man staff.

From 8 a.m. until 10 p.m., with an hour out here and there for various and sundry other duties, the staff could be found huddled around a table, looking at a blackboard filled with diagrammed plays, charts with various bits of information, or movies, or simply talking.

How well did they stick to this schedule? A fine was levied to any coach, including Hess, who was not in his seat at the conference table at 8 a.m. Needless to say, little money was taken in, though at times there were offenders, including Hess occasionally.

The daily schedule, Monday through Thursday during the season, went something like this: 8 a.m.-10 a.m., uninterrupted meeting in conference room; (sometimes this went on until noon); 10 a.m.-3 p.m., coaches had various other duties, including teaching of classes, ministering to the needs of their players, preparing scouting reports on upcoming opponents, etc.

At 3 p.m. they headed for the locker room in Peden Stadium to get ready for the day's practice, beginning at 3:30. This lasted anywhere until 5:45 p.m. By 7 p.m. they were back in meetings, either with their fellow coaches or with groups of players designated by positions (Quarterbacks together, etc.)

Fridays, the schedule was fairly lax, with certain fellows preparing to take off for scouting assignments, others taking it easy, trying to hold off the tension building up for next day's game.

On home game nights, Hess would return to the office by 7 p.m. to begin looking at films of that day's game, joined by other members of the staff.

On Sunday morning, they would all be back at 8 a.m., with a two-fold task ahead of them. Grade and evaluate the preceding day's movies, hear the scouting report and prepare for the next week's opponent.

OU Dormitory Program Parallels Physical Growth

By Joann Conover Reiss

"BUILDING" is most commonly thought of as adding to a physical plant.

On a university campus this type of "Building" is only one part of the entire picture.

"Building" exists in a university's program, it's staff and, most important of all, it's product . . . college graduates.

"Building" a college graduate is to prepare him for his role as an American citizen . . . one who is well-informed and can lead others.

On the Ohio University campus where nearly 60 per cent of the students live in dormitories, building these college graduates rests heavily on a "quality" dormitory program, as well as a "quality" academic program.

"... Dr. William R. Butler, Ohio University's dean of men, his staff, and Assistant to the President Brandon T. Grover tackled the problem of establishing a quality dormitory program for men this fall which would parallel the development in the academic area."

A good academic program can produce a well-informed student but it takes a good dormitory program to provide the incentive for academic achievement and cultivate leadership qualities.

With this knowledge Dr. William R. Butler, Ohio University's dean of men, and his staff tackled the problem of establishing a "quality" dormitory program for men this fall which would parallel the development already being conducted in the academic area.

The first step was to make it an honor to live in a dormitory.

It was logical that students who were awarded dormitory assignments on a set of criteria would consider their assignment with higher regard.

Therefore, the Dean of Men's staff based its selection of 690 upperclass male students for dormitory housing according to the following: (1) Good scholarship; (2) Good dormitory citizenship; and (3) Leadership demonstrated in their living group.

Good scholarship is specifically a 2.0 ("C" grade) or better average. Good dormitory citizenship is a student's ability to get along with others and his respect for rules and regulations in the dormitory in which he lives.

A student holding an office, chairmanship or membership on a committee in the dormitory is demonstrating leadership.

This fall more male upperclassmen wished to return to dormitory housing than there were openings . . . already a sign of the changing regard toward this type of housing.

Of those left without dormitory assignments, two hundred and fifty were placed on a waiting list ranked according to the three-fold criteria.

Seventy-five were completely denied dormitory housing because, primarily, of poor citizenship. According to Dean Butler, "Chances are very slim they will ever live again in university housing."

The Penalty for Pranks

In one actual case . . . Johnnie had been involved in altogether too many pranks in the dorm. He and a few of his friends found it quite amusing, at one time, to allow a duck roam the dorm, on another occasion, to let several snakes loose, and still another time, to use the back of the door to his room as a dart target.

Johnnie was warned and counseled after each incident . . . but to no avail. The pranks were minor in themselves, but collectively they added up to a negative influence on others in the dorm.

Final action was to deny Johnnie the privilege of returning to university housing.

Now Jim, on the other hand, will return to dormitory housing.

A sophomore last year, his record showed that he pledged a fraternity, worked at the dormitory phone desk and served on the dormitory disciplinary court. His grades averaged an even 2.0 and his citizenship within the dormitory was high.

Selecting desirable dormitory residents has some foreseeable benefits.

One is the fact that returning upperclassmen will set an example for the incoming freshmen. By this example

"... An all-upperclass male dormitory, Tiffin Hall held a dormitory convocation series for its residents where professors (Dr. Troy Organ in photo) were invited to speak on pertinent subjects.

"... Each graduate assistant is required to work six hours per week for the Dean of Men's Office. This provides 'on-the-job' training ..."

alone, it is possible more male freshmen students will "make the grade."

Secondly, selected upperclassmen will produce stronger leadership in the dormitories. Stronger leadership could mean more active participation on the part of dormitories in campus activities.

An indication of the above is the accomplishments of Tiffin Hall in the past year.

An all-upperclass male dormitory, Tiffin Hall held a dormitory convocation series for its residents where professors were invited to speak on various pertinent subjects.

Tiffin Hall entered the Homecoming activities with a house decoration and walked away with first place . . . the first to go to a non-Greek housing unit.

Tiffin Hall also took first place in dormitory scholarship and started the wheels rolling on building a dormitory library.

Selection made it an honor to live in a dormitory, but it was necessary to develop a spirited and well-guided program within each housing unit.

This brings in the second step to a "quality" dormitory program . . . a top-notch, well-trained staff.

In a sense the Dean of Men's staff has put the cart before the horse, because for several years now they have been working on this second step.

The stipends of 11 graduate assistantships, nine head residentships and 90 undergraduate counselorships have been up-graded to the point that they now compare very favorably with others in the nation.

Dean Butler estimates that "approximately $70,000 a year is spent in combined stipends."

A head resident and his wife receive room, board and $900 for the first year. This includes waiver of all his graduate fees except the incidental fee of $30 for all regular sessions.

If he and his wife are appointed a second year their stipend will increase to $1100.

The stipend for a graduate assistant is $1800 for the first year and jumps to $2000 if he remains a second year. He has all his graduate fees, except the incidental fee, waived if he is a first year graduate student.

Selection of Head Residents

An undergraduate counselor receives $150 per semester. This stipend is figured in terms of the rent for a single room for one semester.

The head resident must be married and without children, whereas a graduate assistant must be single.

The reason for this is mainly facilities. The head resident and his wife live in a small, one-bedroom apartment within the dormitory. The graduate assistant lives in a single room in the dormitory among the residents.

The head resident and his wife are hired as a team.

It is felt that the wife's presence in the dormitory has a very positive effect on the residents. By her own appearance, manners and behavior she influences the development of a higher standard of living there.

Both the head resident and graduate assistant must be admitted as regular graduate students in the Graduate College to qualify for their positions.

"... The workshop gives the staff a frame of reference in which to operate; as the year goes by they paint in the picture."

They are entitled to carry nine hours a semester toward their respective majors.

The head resident's wife may take a limited academic load or be employed a limited number of hours each week outside the residence hall.

All three must have undergraduate backgrounds of superior quality in academic work and have an interest in student activities.

This past year a new phase was inaugurated in the graduate assistant's program. Each GA is required to work approximately six hours per week in the Dean of Men's office.

This provides "on-the-job" training because most of these people are going into some form of student personnel work or teaching.

Their work at the office involves interviewing, counseling, research, clerical and other administrative activities. Examples are: (1) Investigating problems that arise with students in the community, on campus and in fraternities; (2) Counseling students not attending classes regularly; (3) Inspecting off-campus housing; (4) Issuing student work permits in registration line; (5) Acting as advisors to the Student General Court and the Interfraternity Pledge Council; and (6) Answering the various personnel questionnaires that come into the office.

All work, Dean Butler emphasizes is done under constant supervision of himself and his two assistant deans, Paul J. Schofer, and Joseph H. Dando.

"... Staff members meet Ohio University's President John C. Baker informally at a dinner-meeting. The next morning he talks to the group formally."

This year's head residents and graduate assistants consist of people from Washington, Utah, Illinois, Iowa, Idaho, New York, Pennsylvania and, naturally, Ohio and Ohio University.

The 90 undergraduate counselors are chosen in the spring for the coming year. They make application to the Dean of Men's office and are screened.

It is understood that each applicant must have a 2.0 average. If he becomes a counselor and his average falls below a 2.0, his contract is dropped.

Each screening staff is suppose to ask: Would we want this person as a counselor on our staff? If so, why? If not, why not?

Workshop Prepares Staff

What follows is the drawing up of a recommendation on each applicant. These are sent to the Dean of Men's office where the final decision is made.

The number of applications for all three positions this fall was very large . . . allowing for the selection of the best possible staff. For instance, 250 applications were received and screened for the 90 counselor assignments.

Five days prior to the opening of school in the fall, the entire staff . . . numbering 120 . . . is briefed on the operation of the dormitories and their respective duties.

"... The head resident and his wife are hired as a team. It is felt that the wife's presence in the dormitory has a very positive effect on the standard of living there."

At this workshop the staff picks-up common objectives and procedures. The unity in which they work will largely determine the success of the entire "quality" dormitory program.

As Dean Butler puts it, the workshop gives the staff "a frame of reference in which they can operate; as the year goes by they paint in the picture."

The workshop initiates a means of communication between the staff members. The follow-up is provided in weekly staff meetings throughout the year.

Every Tuesday afternoon the head residents and graduate assistants meet with Dean Butler and Dean Dando to renew their objectives and discuss problems that may have arisen.

On Wednesday the head residents and graduate assistants meet with their counselors in their respective dormitories. The counselors in turn take a report to their floors the following night.

Spark of Effective Programming

The spirited, well-guided program that will sustain the effect of it being an honor to live in a dormitory is largely up to the head resident and his staff. The head resident provides the spark of effective programming.

As shown by the example of Tiffin Hall, this program-

"... ninety undergraduate counselors are chosen in the spring for the coming year. Each screening staff is supposed to ask: "Would we want this person as a counselor on our staff? If so, why? If not, why not?"

ming can, and it is hoped will, go beyond the usual participation on the East Green Council, (that area's governing body), dormitory disciplinary court and social and intramural activities.

President John C. Baker has often stated that the university's objectives are not measured in terms of size, but in terms of quality and high standards.

As his retirement from the university approaches he can truly say that his administration will be known as a time when great attention was paid to scholarship and quality education.

The selection of residents by a three-fold criteria applies at the moment only to the nine men's dormitories.

As for the women's dormitories, Dean of Women, Margaret Deppen, says there are no changes this year in their method of selection.

All women wishing to return to university housing draw for their dormitory preference. If the dormitory is filled they are placed on a waiting list for that unit. They can be transferred to openings in other dormitories if the person requests it.

The OU Greens —

THERE WAS a day, not so very long ago, that the Hocking River numbered among its chattels an area of land just east of the Ohio University campus. The land was at times planted in corn, and the deed said it belonged to the University. But the River was king. Each year it rose to assert its sovereignty by inundating the land.

But like most tyrants, the mighty Hocking fell. The ominous signs of defeat came in 1945 when a group of University administrators looked out across the flooded land and declared that they would build a housing area there.

Within months the uprising was underway. The initial weapon was more than one hundred thousand cubic yards of fill dirt, raising the land five and one-half feet.

Pressure of an enrollment surge following World War II forced immediate construction of barracks housing, even before paved streets and sidewalks could be built. The result was housing for 700 men.

The River did not surrender easily. For a time it fought a last ditch battle, delivering enough thrust to provide the housing area with the somewhat ignoble name of "Hog Island."

But a series of upstream developments, chief among them the Thomas Jenkins Dam near Gloucester, administered the coup de grace. The mighty Hocking retreated back within its banks and Hog Island became East Green.

This fall the University dedicated its completed East Green dormitory area. Open houses in the 11 dormitory buildings were held on November 19, just one day after ground was broken for the beginning of a West Green.

In times when dormitories make the difference in Ohio University's determination to adequately serve the state's college-age youth, East Green stands as a source of monumental pride.

Its modern rooms house some 2200 men and 600 women. The strength of its student government attests to its development as a student community. Walk areas that were once wooden ramps across the mud are now cement walkways through green malls. Students eat in dining rooms that would merit the endorsing seal of Duncan Hines.

East Green has added more than 14 acres to the campus of Ohio University, setting the stage for future development away from the city. Its colonial architecture has provided a harmonious bridge between the original campus and future construction.

And so, East Green has been dedicated. Just seven years after its first dormitory, Johnson Hall, was opened to students, "The Green" is completed. Even the proud River must be looking with satisfaction at the area wrested from its domain some 15 years ago.

East and West

WHEN THE Cincinnati architectural firm of Potter, Tyler, Martin & Roth began the Herculean task of designing a master plan for West Green, one of the prime considerations was a report from Ohio University students.

The report, developed from the experiences of East Green residents, evaluated student opinions and listed many recommendations for the new 12-dormitory area. Many of the student suggestions have been incorporated into the building plans.

This close relationship between the two great projects was officially recognized November 18, when ground breaking for West Green preceded by one day the dedication of East Green.

Like East Green, the new West Green will spring up on acreage that once "belonged" to the Hocking River. In appearance, it will be distinctive, although its buildings will harmonize with those on East Green. The most prominent building will be an eight-story elevator dormitory in the center. The other 11 dormitories will be three and four story structures.

Plans call for two extensive malls at levels slightly below that of the first floors (as indicated in the architect's drawing on the next two pages). Bridges will connect the malls with buildings not directly abutting them. Roadways will be underneath the foot bridges.

The first unit, started this fall, will house 186 students and provide dining facilities for 1500. In addition to these facilities, the first floor will contain an office, a lounge, a library, and a recreation room with snack bar. The basement will furnish parking for 70 cars.

With the beginning of West Green, Ohio University begins to look ahead to an enrollment of 12,000 in the next seven years.

During these years the growth of West Green will move ahead steadily as it becomes feasible to finance its expansion. Funds for construction of all Ohio University dormitories are made available through loans, to be paid back by room rentals.

The present intention is to include within West Green a new engineering building forming the north-south axis of the area.

The front of West Green will parallel Richland Avenue, just across from Porter Hall and the Brandon T. Grover Physical Education Center.

From the experiences of East Green have evolved the plans for West Green. And with only a brief pause for retrospect, the University again looks to the future of dormitory development.

A PREVIEW LOOK AT WEST GREEN

Architect's drawing of Ohio University's proposed student housing area shows eight-story dormitory surrounded by three and four story dormitories. At the far right, parallel with the river, is a proposed new engineering building. Both men and women will live on the West Green.

Picked for New York College Presidency

BY A UNANIMOUS VOTE of a special committee and approval of the Board of Trustees at the New York City Community College of Applied Arts and Sciences, Dr. Lawrence L. Jarvie, '28, was selected as the college's new president.

His name has been forwarded to the Board of Trustees of the State University of New York for the final approval required under that state's Education Law.

Dr. Jarvie will be leaving his post as executive dean for institutes and community colleges of the State University of New York which he has held since 1949 to take presidency.

Prior to his executive dean position, Jarvie was associate commissioner in the New York State Department of Education. In that capacity he was involved in the establishment of 19 two-year colleges.

Other positions Jarvie has held since 1935 include teaching at George Washington University, consultant to public schools in the District of Columbia, director of curriculum and research of the Rochester Institute of Technology, associate in personnel with the Commission of Teacher Education of the American Council on Education.

He served in the United States Army as Lieutenant Colonel from 1942-46 holding the posts of chief of the Training, Command and General Staff School and director of instruction at the Warton American Technical School in the European Theater of Operation.

Following his graduation from Ohio University, Jarvie went on to study at Harvard University and Ohio State University. He received

The Coalescence of My Life's Work

LEARNING. . . in this case "Living Room Learning". . . has pulled another Ohio University graduate back to education.

Katherine Boyd Shurtleff, '35, has assumed the post of head of "Living Room Learning," a series of courses offered by the Division of General Studies, in the Cleveland College at Western Reserve University.

Mrs. Shurtleff had given up education temporarily to rear her family: Linda, a sophomore at Oberlin College; Robert, a senior at Collinwood High School; and Ralph, a sixth grader at O.H. Perry Elementary School.

Prior to that she did teacher training and supervision at Eastern Kentucky State Teachers College, Ohio University and Kent State University.

"Living Room Learning" is short, non-credit courses for adults usually held in private homes or schools. Presently there are 73 courses and each runs for eight sessions.

Mrs. Shurtleff's job is class co-ordinator. She tries to read or scan every book considered for a course. She's always on the look-out for good discussion leaders.

"A discussion leader must elicit from others their feelings based on reading and life experiences. A lecturer, on the other hand, may ask a question which requires thinking and is relevant to the subject and then gets an answer from the person asked."

An LRL course is instituted in this manner. A responsible friend volunteers to line-up 20 people or so to make a class and arranges for a time and meeting place.

"During our daytime classes," Mrs. Shurtleff explains, "we have mainly women enrolled." They are usually housewives interested in intellectual stimulation. Evening courses, on the other hand, enroll many husbands and wife teams.

The elements of a LRL course are accurate reading, creative listening and responsible speech. Such topics as the arts, economics and finance, history, literature, philosophy, religion and many more are covered in the courses.

Mrs. Shurtleff took over the post from Mrs. Grazella P. Sheperd, who retired in June as head of the division of general education at Western Reserve University.

It was Mrs. Sheperd who spearheaded the idea of "Living Room Learning" courses in Cleveland. They were developed jointly by the Women's Association of Cleveland College and its general education division.

The program's pattern has been adapted and copied in other universities in the United States and Canada. A total of 4,000 Greater Clevelanders has enrolled in them since 1954.

Mrs. Shurtleff's interest in the "Living Room Learning" program started when she conducted a course on "Viewpoints on Education" last year and early this year. In addition she assisted Mrs. Sheperd with special projects.

A native of Reynoldsburg near Columbus, Mrs. Shurtleff graduated from Ohio University with a bachelor's degree in 1935 and a MA degree in 1936. Her husband, Wade, is community relations director of the East Ohio Gas Co. and a 1939 graduate of Ohio University.

Of the "Living Room Learning" program, Mrs. Shurtleff says, "It's an exciting program to me, offering variety and intellectual ferment. Let's say this job is the coalescence of my life's work.

IN ROOM 405 of the Department of Business Services at the University of Texas sits an Ohio University graduate, John Lymberopoulos, '56.

When not in his office, he's in the classroom instructing business statistics or at home working on his doctoral dissertation.

John Lymberopoulos, known as "Taki" to many friends and classmates, left the OU campus with a BSC degree to enter the Graduate School at the University of Texas in Austin.

While working on his master's degree in International Trade, he received the Anglo-American-Hellenic Bureau of Education Award in academic achievements. Then in 1957, following receipt of his degree, John was appointed instructor in business statistics.

Recently he received the Teaching Excellence Award for the College of Business Administration.

John is carrying on his active participation in Delta Sigma Pi, a business administration professional fraternity, to which he was initiated while at OU. He is now faculty advisor of the University of Texas chapter.

In addition to his teaching and graduate studies, John is part-time research associate at the Bureau of Business Research of the University of Texas.

As research associate he works with a team of faculty members. "We are engaged in the development of a new decision-making device in the form of managerial decisions to be used as a training tool by small businessmen through-out the nation."

"Teaching," remarks John, "has been for me a great and valuable experience. I enjoy immensely working with my students."

His main ambition is to continue teaching, remarking, "Ohio University would certainly be one of the most desirable places to return to."

John came to the United States and Ohio University in 1953 soon after his graduation from Athens College, a high school in Athens, Greece, supported by both the Greek Government and the Near East College Association. He was able to come to OU through a Foreign Tuition Scholarship awarded him.

IT'S BEEN MONTHS now since carpenters invaded the old Men's Gym. Renovation is the purpose. The old gym building is being converted into approximately 16 classrooms varying in student capacities from 20 to 200. It will be used largely by the history and government departments

BROADWAY came to Ohio University last month! A capacity crowd of students, faculty and townspeople saw Archibald MacLeish's Pulitzer Prize-winning play "J.B." complete with the original Broadway settings Nov. 2 . . . AMERICA'S best known pollster, Dr. George Gallup, opened a new lecture series last month at OU. His talk in Ewing Auditorium was the first in the Herman Gerlack James Lectures, a series of programs newly established in honor of OU's former President James . . . ANOTHER lecture series was opened for the 1960-61 year by Dr. Lawrence P. Eblin, professor of chemistry: the Faculty Lecture Series. His subject? "Reflections on Water." . . . EVERYTHING in Ohio History from 1803 to the present got a going over by some 100 high school juniors and seniors on the OU campus Nov. 11 and 12. They were here for the final essay examination in the Fourteenth Annual Ohio

History, Government and Citizenship Contest . . . 13,815 (8 per cent) MORE STUDENTS are attending Ohio's 52 universities and colleges in the Ohio College Association than a year ago, bringing the total enrollment figure for 1960 to 183,665. OU Registrar Robert Mahn released these figures, speaking for the College Registrars Association of Ohio which collected the data . . . WHEN Ronald Eugene Gillilan of Mariemont entered OU this fall, he followed a tradition long ago established by members of his family. Those who preceded him at the university were his grandmother, Mary White Gillilan; father, Kenneth Gillilan, '37; mother, Opal Clifton Gillilan, '41; aunts, Fredia Gillilan, '30; Ada Gillilan Crane, '40; Mary Gillilan Burns, '43; and Helena Gillilan, '36; uncle, Clarence Gillilan, '26; and cousin, the Rev.

RONALD E. GILLILAN

Hugh Gillilan, '55 . . . AN AMUSED capacity crowd toured booths at the carnival opening the 30th Annual Greek Week at OU Nov. 4. During the week preceding the carnival, panel discussions, convocations and the annual Blood Drive were held, all ending with the Greek Week dance Nov. 11 with Buddy Morrow's Band playing . . . OU AFFILIATES and townspeople are taking to their skates once again! Bird's Arena opened for public skating Nov. 11 and announced intentions of forming figure skating club with membership open to the public

. . . . IN THE Eastern Region of Nigeria, two Ohio University faculty members, Donald E. Perry and Harvey Miner are busy teaching the rudiments of industrial arts. Although less heralded than the OU project in the Western Regions, the industrial arts project is of extreme importance to Nigerians who are witnessing a surge in mechanization throughout their land . . . OU NOW has the distinction of being the second state university in Ohio to have approved vocational counseling. The university's

PERRY WITH NIGERIAN TEACHERS

Testing and Counseling Center has been approved for two years by the American Personnel and Guidance Association. The first university approved was Ohio State . . . A TOTAL of eight musical works have been composed and published in the past year by one of Athens most prolific composers, Mrs. Eusebia Hunkins, wife of Maurel Hunkins, OU's director of public occasions. Her works range from folk-song arrangements for men and womens voices to an American folk-opera, "Young Lincoln II", and an Ojibwe American Indian opera, "Maniian."
